Dr. Christopher L. Foote

Senior Economist and Policy Advisor
Research Department
Federal Reserve Bank of Boston

Christopher L. Foote is a senior economist and policy advisor in the research department at the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. His research and policy interests include the macroeconomics of the labor market and housing. He graduated from the College of William and Mary in 1987, and then worked for two years as a newspaper reporter in Harrisonburg, Virginia. He received an economics Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 1996. From 1996 to 2002, Foote taught at Harvard University's department of economics. In July 2002, he accepted a position as senior staff economist with the Council of Economic Advisers, becoming chief economist at the CEA in February 2003. From May 2003 to September 2003, he served as an economic advisor to the Coalition Provisional Authority in Baghdad, Iraq, returning briefly to Iraq in January and February of 2004. He joined the Boston Fed in October 2003. In his spare time, Chris teaches intermediate macroeconomics at Harvard, where he was named a Professor of the Practice of Economics in 2012.
